

"What made this experience different for me is actually having input in giving money to an organization. Looking at the different aspects of each organization was very rewarding to me. I am so glad I had the opportunity to participate."

MIA ENGLEMON

MAJOR: HEALTH SCIENCE WITH A FOCUS IN PSYCHOLOGY.

Alyssa Horstman
Major: Health Science
Minor: Marketing

"chose Health Science as my major so I can focus in on the Administration side of health care"

The biggest lesson I learned about the role of nonprofits in addressing health disparities and the social determinants of health was the impact they have. Both nonprofits are providing a life changing service for those who meet their qualifications.

This experience was different for me. Because of the way we approached the assignment's and the nonprofit Organizations. We were put in Groups and it forced me to see Others point of views that I may Not have agreed with or even Thought of. It made it a unique experience.

Ann Marie Mendiola

Health Sciences

“I think the biggest thing that made this learning experience different for me would be learning to communicate without face-to-face contact. My team worked hard, and we learned to adapt to the circumstances in order to meet our goals.”

PATRICIA HOWELL

COMMUNICATION STUDIES MAJOR

- This class opened my eyes to a new way of looking at health disparities in my own backyard. I learned how patient advocacy is lacking for those who are at a low spot in their lives and with a bit of trust building, lives can be changed with a little compassion.

MADELINE YAW

Major(s): Public Relations and Health Communication

Through my experience with Maverson Project, I have learned how non-profit organizations address health disparities and social determinants in the communities they are based in. Non-profit organizations work to uphold the integrity of their patients, while providing them with the resources they need to live happily.