2. There are careers that match a variety of interests.
3. The work is challenging and interesting.
4. Positions provide good work/life balance.
5. Opportunities exist for advancement within government.
6. Positions offer professional development opportunities.
7. Government jobs offer job security.

Negatives about Federal Government Employment

1. Bureaucracy does exist within many positions.
2. The hiring process can be long and tedious.
3. You will not get rich working for the government.
4. There is often a revolving door of leadership because of movement within the government ranks.
5. It often takes time to make a difference; you may find such delays discouraging.

Follow Up

If done appropriately, follow-up during and after a federal job search is acceptable. Keep these guidelines in mind:

- Check position announcement for name of contact person.
- During process, seek clarification if needed: “Can you clarify for me...?”
- After submission, confirm receipt of materials: “Did you receive all my materials?”
- 30 days after job closing, check applicant status: “Can you tell me my status?”
- If not considered for this position, it is acceptable to ask for suggestions for the next time you apply.

Be patient!

It can take 2-4 months for your federal job application to be processed.

The Experts Say...

Know your agencies!

- ♦ Find links to government agencies' careers pages at GoGovernment.org.
- ♦ Search agency sites for job and internship postings before searching USAJobs.gov.

Remember the 80% rule!

- ♦ The federal job search is competitive and time-consuming, so seek well-matched positions.
- ♦ If you do not meet at least 80 percent of the job requirements, don't waste your time applying.

Federal Resume Summary

- 3-4 pages in length.
- Includes detailed work experience.
- Provides a complete listing of all job-related activities.
- Requires additional details for personal information and work experience.

Federal Resume Tips

- An electronic federal resume created through USAJobs.gov is appropriate for most federal positions.
- In addition to name and contact information, remember to include the title, series, and grade of job sought, along with the announcement number.
- If applicable, include special hiring programs, past federal experience, clearances, and veteran's preference.
- Remember to include relevant courses completed, GPA, and relevant projects, honors, and activities.
- Be specific and accurate when listing dates of experience, and include ending salary and supervisor's name and contact information.
- Other relevant categories should be included, including computer and foreign language skills.
