

“
I LEARNED TO THINK CRITICALLY &
CONSIDER DIVERSE
PERSPECTIVES
”

ROB

I'm an Academic Librarian. I teach research skills to undergraduate and graduate students, provide research consultation services, and collaborate with various campus partners on information literacy initiatives.

The courses I took in the department expanded my worldview and taught me the importance of historical context. And the professors' passion for education influences me still today.

The history major helped me develop research skills that I use on a regular basis. Since I write and publish as part of my job, all the papers I wrote as a history major gave me experience with formal academic writing.

The career path may not be as obvious as in some subjects, but there are a variety of options if you spend time exploring. Doing something that you enjoy and that you care about makes a big difference in life.